RESPONSE TO SHOW CAUSE ORDER

I. Case Summary

Walter Barton’s habeas petition contains two claims that fail as a matter of law. Barton’s own expert opines that he is competent to be executed under the controlling standard, but disputes whether courts should follow that standard. The innocence claim presents nothing new, it is alleged to be a gateway to claims that have already been rejected by this Court as insubstantial, and it does not come close to showing that no reasonable juror would convict. There is nothing that supports granting a writ here.

II. Statement of Exhibits

1. Respondent’s Exhibit 1 is the Missouri Supreme Court’s decision denying habeas relief on Barton’s current claims in State ex rel. Barton v. Stange, SC98343.
2. Respondent’s Exhibit 2 is the competency evaluation by Dr. Zapf presented as Exhibit 14 in State ex rel. Barton v. Stange, SC98343.
3. Respondent’s Exhibit 3 contains prison mental health records of Mr. Barton presented as Exhibit A by the Warden in State ex rel. Barton v. Stange, SC98343.
4. Respondent’s Exhibit 4 is the order of this Court denying habeas relief in Barton v. Steele,

4:14-CV-8001-GAF.

5. Respondent's Exhibit 5 is the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit denying a certificate of appealability in Barton v. Griffith, et al., 18-2241.
6. Respondent's Exhibit 6 is the opinion of the Missouri Supreme Court in the post-conviction appeal in Barton v. State, SC95139.
7. Respondent's Exhibit 7 is the opinion of the Missouri Supreme Court in the post-conviction appeal in Barton v. State, SC93371.
8. Respondents Exhibit 8 is the opinion of the Missouri Supreme Court in the direct appeal in State v. Barton, SC87859.

III. Federal habeas courts give great deference to state decisions.

State court decisions on federal issues are entitled to great deference under 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d). A state court decision must be left undisturbed unless the decision was contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly-established federal law as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States, or the decision was based on an unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the evidence presented in state court. Colvin v. Taylor, 324 F.3d 583, 586–87 (8th Cir. 2003).

A decision is contrary to United States Supreme Court precedent if it decides a case based on a different rule of law than the rule dictated by United States Supreme Court precedent, or if it decides a case differently than the United States Supreme Court did on materially indistinguishable facts. Id. A decision may only be overturned as an unreasonable interpretation or application of clearly-established United States Supreme Court precedent if the decision is both wrong and an objectively unreasonable interpretation or application of United States Supreme Court precedent. Id. A federal habeas court may not disturb an objectively reasonable state court decision on a question of federal law, even if the decision is, in the federal court's view, wrong under Eighth Circuit precedent, and even if the habeas court would have decided the case differently on a clean slate. Id. Further, failure to extend a United States Supreme Court precedent is not an objectively unreasonable interpretation or application of that precedent. "Section 2254(d)(1) provides a remedy for instances in which a State court unreasonably applies [the United States Supreme Court's] precedent; it does not require courts to extend that precedent or license federal courts to treat failure to do so as error." White v. Woodall, 134 S.Ct. 1697, 1706 (2014) (emphasis and bold in original). State court factual determinations are presumed to be correct and this presumption can only be rebutted by clear and convincing evidence. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(1).

Merits analysis turns on whether the decision of the Missouri courts is consistent with an objectively reasonable application of United States Supreme Court precedent. Under this standard, "[a] state court's determination that a claim lacks merit precludes habeas relief so long as fairminded jurists could disagree." Harrington v. Richter, 131 S.Ct. 770, 786 (2011). "If this standard is difficult to meet, that is because it was meant to be." Id. "It preserves authority to issue the writ in cases where there is no possibility that fair-minded jurists could disagree that the state court decision conflicts with [the United States Supreme Court's] precedents. It goes no farther." Id.

When a state prisoner asks a federal court to set aside a sentence due to ineffective assistance of counsel, the federal courts use a 'doubly deferential' standard of review that gives both the state court and the defense attorney the benefit of the doubt. Burt v. Titlow, 571 U.S. 12, 15 (2013).

"The AEDPA standard is difficult to meet as it is intended as a guard against extreme malfunctions in state criminal justice systems, not as a substitute for ordinary error corrections through appeal.” Nash v. Russell, 807 F.3d 892, 897 (8th Cir. 2015) (internal quotation marks omitted). “Accordingly, we assume that any facts found by the state court were correct, and the petitioner bears the burden to show us by clear and convincing evidence that such factual conclusions below were incorrect.” Id.

IV. The competence-to-be-executed claim is clearly meritless.

In finding Barton competent to be executed, the Missouri Supreme Court quoted Madison v. Alabama, 139 S.Ct. 718, 722 (2019) for the proposition that the Eighth Amendment prohibits the execution of a person who does not have a rational understanding of why the State seeks to impose capital punishment. Resp. Ex. 1 at 6. The Missouri Supreme Court also cited Madison, 139 S.Ct. at 723 for the proposition that the prisoner must prove a psychotic disorder that makes him unaware of the reasons for his punishment or causes him not to have a rational understanding of it. The Missouri Supreme Court also relied on Panetti v. Quarterman, 551 U.S. 949 (2007) and Ford v. Wainright, 477 U.S. 399, 426 (1986) (Powell, J., concurring). The Missouri Supreme Court found that Panetti and the concurrence in Ford require Barton to demonstrate a substantial threshold showing of insanity for the matter to proceed further. Resp. Ex. 1 at 6.

The Missouri Supreme Court found that Barton’s expert, Dr. Zapf, found that Barton is competent under Justice Powell’s concurrence in Ford. Resp. Ex. 1 at 7. The Missouri Supreme Court quoted from sections of Dr. Zapf’s report in which she found that Barton had a factual and rational understanding of his punishment, as well as the reasons for it, and found that he did not suffer from delusional thinking, loss of contact with reality, or perceptual disturbances. Resp. Ex. 1 at 8. The Missouri Supreme Court also cited Barton’s prison mental health records, which indicated no clinically significant symptoms of mental illness.

The United States Supreme Court in Dunn v. Madison, 138 S.Ct. 9, 12 (2017) reversed a circuit court of appeals and found that a state court reasonably applied Ford and Panetti in finding an offender competent to be executed where the offender recognized he would be put to death for the murder he was found to have committed, even if he had no memory of committing the murder. The United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit vacated a district court stay of execution in Cole v. Roper, 783 F.3d 707, 709–12 (8th Cir. 2015) where the Missouri Supreme Court reasonably found that the offender rationally understood his death sentence and the reason for it. Madison and Cole control here. The record here, including the report of Barton’s own expert, supports the reasonable factual conclusion that Barton has a factual and rational understanding that he is to be executed for the murder that he was convicted of committing. United States Supreme Court precedent dictates no more. Barton has presented no evidence to rebut the presumption that the Missouri Supreme Court’s findings of fact were reasonable, he only disagrees with the result the Court reached. Pet. at 17–18. But factual determinations are not unreasonable “merely because the federal habeas court could have reached a different conclusion in the first instance.” Wood v. Allen, 558 U.S. 290, 301 (2010). So, as a matter of law, the decision of the Missouri Supreme Court is reasonable and must be left undisturbed.

V. There is no free-standing claim of innocence in federal habeas, Barton does not meet the gateway innocence standard for review of defaulted claims, and this Court already rejected Barton’s gateway innocence claims as insubstantial in his previous federal habeas petition.

In Clay v. Dormire, 37 S.W.3d 214, 217–18 (Mo. 2000), the Missouri Supreme Court adopted federal actual-innocence analysis for reviewing defaulted claims in habeas corpus. State ex rel. Nixon v. Jaynes, 63 S.W.3d 210, 215 (Mo. 2001) (stating “[t]his Court in Clay v. Dormire adopted the federal standard for manifest injustice...”). The standard for actual-innocence review of a defaulted claim is set out in Schlup v. Delo, 513 U.S. 298, 327 (1995). “[T]he petitioner must show that it is more likely than not that no reasonable juror would have convicted him in light of the new evidence.” Schlup, 513 U.S. at 327. The Court noted that the standard allows the court to consider the probative force of evidence admitted at trial that is now alleged to have been illegally admitted, as well as evidence “tenably” claimed to have been wrongfully excluded or to have become available only after trial. Id. at 326. The Court found that such evidence must be “new reliable evidence.” Id. at 324. A court is not to use its independent judgment about whether reasonable doubt exists in considering an actual innocence claim, because the standard is that “no reasonable juror would have found the defendant guilty.” Id. at 329. Rather, the standard requires a “court to make a probabilistic determination about what a reasonable properly instructed juror would do.” Id.

Actual innocence analysis involves analysis of all the evidence, including that alleged to have been illegally admitted, that alleged to have been wrongly excluded, and that which has been newly discovered. Id. at 327–28. Actual innocence analysis focuses on new, reliable evidence of factual, not legal, innocence—such as credible declarations of guilt by another, trustworthy eyewitness accounts, and exculpatory scientific evidence. Pitts v. Norris, 85 F.3d 348, 350–51 (8th Cir. 1996). New evidence in this context means evidence the factual basis of which could not previously have been discovered through due diligence. Meadows v. Delo, 99 F.3d 280, 282 (8th Cir. 1996). Conflicting testimony that would create a “swearing match” between witnesses does not establish innocence under the no-reasonable-juror-would-vote-to-convict standard. Moore-El v. Luebbers, 446 F.3d 890, 902–03 (8th Cir. 2006); In re McKim v. Cassidy, 457 S.W.3d 831, 843–52 (Mo. App. W.D. 2015) (presentation of new expert evidence that conflicts with the testimony of the state’s expert at trial does not meet the gateway innocence standard, much less the higher free-standing innocence standard). One must actually present new evidence of actual innocence in order to make a viable claim of actual innocence, and allowing well-drafted allegations to take the place of the actual presentation of evidence establishing innocence would “make a mockery of the Supreme Court’s concern for finality, comity, and judicial economy.” Weeks v. Bowersox, 119 F.3d 1342, 1352 (8th Cir. 1997) (en banc).

In State ex rel. Amrine v. Roper, 102 S.W.3d 541, 548 (Mo. 2003), the Missouri Supreme Court held that, unlike in the federal habeas review system, in a Missouri state habeas capital case, an inmate may use habeas corpus to raise a free-standing claim of actual innocence, seeking discharge from confinement. But he must meet a higher standard than the Schlup/Clay standard under Missouri law to receive relief on a free-standing innocence claim: he must undermine confidence in the verdict through new clear and convincing evidence. Id. Clear and convincing evidence “instantly tilts the scales in the affirmative when weighed against the evidence in opposition, and the fact finder is left with an abiding conviction that the evidence is true.” Id. Free-standing and gateway innocence claims depend on the same “new evidence” of actual innocence, and “it is axiomatic” that if the evidence fails to meet the lower gateway innocence standard it does not meet the higher free-standing innocence standard. McKim, 457 S.W.3d at 843.

But free-standing claims of actual innocence are not cognizable in federal habeas corpus review. “Claims of actual innocence based on newly discovered evidence have never been held to state a ground for federal habeas relief absent an independent constitutional violation occurring in the underlying state criminal proceeding.” Burton v. Dormire, 295 F.3d. 839, 848 (8th Cir. 2002) (quoting Meadows, 99 F.3d at 283 quoting Herrera v. Collins, 506 U.S. 390, 400 (1993)).

Review of gateway innocence claims is inappropriate where the claims, to which the gateway is alleged to lead, have been determined to be without merit, so actual-innocence review would not aid the petitioner in gaining a writ. Burton, 295 F.3d at 848 (declining to conduct gateway actual-innocence review where the underlying legal claims lacked merit, and actual-innocence review was legally unnecessary).

The Missouri Supreme Court rejected Barton's claims of gateway and free-standing innocence in his state court habeas petition. Resp. Ex. 1 at 3–6. As a threshold matter, the Missouri Supreme Court pointed out actual innocence involves analysis of new evidence that was not available at trial Id. at 3 n.4; See Meadows, 99 F.3d at 282. There is nothing new here. As the Missouri Supreme Court pointed out, the innocence claim relies on a blood spatter expert of whom counsel was aware before trial, but whom counsel made a strategic decision not to retain and call. Resp. Ex. 1 at 3. It also relies on additional impeachment of a jail-house informant who understated her prior convictions at trial even though there is no dispute that counsel knew her full criminal history at the time of trial and impeached her with a dozen of her convictions to which she did not admit on direct examination. Resp. Ex. 1 at 4 (“the full extent of Ms. Allen’s convictions was known to counsel before his fifth and final trial”).

There is no such thing as a free-standing innocence claim in federal habeas corpus review. Herrera, 506 U.S. at 417; Burton, 295 F.3d at 848. And gateway innocence analysis is only meaningful if there is some meritorious defaulted claim for which a successful innocence claim would permit review. Barton appears to state two claims of ineffective assistance of trial counsel that he alleges could be reached through gateway actual innocence analysis. These are: 1) that trial counsel was ineffective for failure to develop and present testimony from his current blood spatter expert Mr. Renner (Habeas Petition at 21), which Barton alleges is the same claim he presented in his last federal habeas petition; and 2) that trial counsel failed to properly confront the jail-house informant with all her prior convictions and the deal for her testimony (Habeas Petition at 25). But his Court already considered those claims.

This Court analyzed the ineffectiveness claim regarding trial counsel’s impeachment of the jail-house informant at length. Resp. Ex. 4 at 18–22. This Court rejected the claim as not being substantial, thereby cutting off cause-and-prejudice review. Id. Barton argues here that the ineffectiveness claim that he presents now and that he presented in the earlier petition to this Court is different than the claim he presented to the Missouri Supreme Court. But this Court already rejected that argument, stating “the Court finds that Barton is advancing his previous argument, and the Court can only reverse the Missouri Supreme Court’s decision if it resulted from an unreasonable application of constitutional law or involved an unreasonable finding of fact.” Id. at 24. In an alternate holding, this Court found that if the claim was not preserved, it was not substantial, and that reasonable jurists could not disagree on the point. Id. at 25.

Insofar as the blood spatter ineffectiveness claim has already been rejected on the merits, 28 U.S.C. § 2254(b)(1) prevents this Court reviewing it again. Similarly, claims that this Court found to be insubstantial in rejecting review of the claims under cause-and-prejudice analysis are still insubstantial if Barton seeks to reach them through gateway innocence analysis. They still cannot entitle him to a writ.

Finally, the Missouri Supreme Court correctly and reasonably found that Barton has failed to show that no reasonable juror would now vote to convict. Resp. Ex. 1 3–6. The Missouri Supreme Court found that, even taking the additional evidence not presented as true, one could not find by a preponderance of the evidence that no reasonable juror would convict let alone the higher standard required to show free-standing innocence. Id. at 3–6.

In rejecting an argument about the alleged weakness of the State’s case in a challenge to the proportionality of the sentence, the Missouri Supreme Court noted that, “the circumstantial evidence was strong.” Resp. Ex. 8 at 7–8. The Court summarized the strength of the evidence supporting the proportionality of the death sentence, including the victim's blood on Barton's clothing, blood spatter evidence, Barton lying to the police about when he was in the victim's trailer, Barton's mood change, Barton spending excessive time in the neighbor Horton's bathroom, Barton trying to prevent Horton from going to the victim's trailer, Barton trying to prevent Selvidge from going to the victim's bedroom, the disposal of a check from the victim in a ditch, and the threat to the jail-house informant, Allen. Id.

Even were the offered evidence new, which it is not, and even if Barton had a meritorious defaulted claim, which he does not, he could not prove that no reasonable juror would vote to convict in light of his additional evidence.

Conclusion

This Court should deny Barton's petition for habeas corpus with prejudice.
