† 1 prisoner remains on death row.

- Studies find no meaningful evidence that the use of the death penalty deters crime.

- Studies find the death penalty is more expensive than alternative punishments.

Women, Youth, and Veterans

Women:

There are 47 women with death sentences as of January 1, 2026, or 2.3% of the total death row population; 18 women have been executed since 1976.

Youth:

In Roper v. Simmons (2005), the Supreme Court struck down the death penalty for juveniles. Much of the rationale and evidence the Court applied in Roper also applies to 18- to 20-year-olds.

Veterans:

Veterans are overrepresented on death rows across the U.S. About 10% of people facing execution today and 14% of those executed since 1976 are veterans, while veterans comprise just 6% of the public.

Mental Impairments

Intellectual Disability:

The Supreme Court held in Atkins v. Virginia (2002) that it is unconstitutional to execute defendants with intellectual disabilities.

Mental Illness:

Only two states, Ohio (2021) and Kentucky (2022), have enacted legislation to exempt people with severe mental illness from death penalty eligibility. The American Bar Association, American Psychological Association, American Psychiatric Association and other mental health advocates formally support excluding individuals with severe mental illness (SMI) from death penalty eligibility and execution.

Acknowledgements

The Death Penalty Information Center (DPI) is a national non-profit organization providing the media, policymakers, and the general public with data and analysis on issues concerning capital punishment and the people it affects. For more than 35 years, DPI has been the preeminent national resource for timely and trustworthy information about the death penalty. DPI does not take a position on the death penalty itself but is critical of problems in its application.

DPI is an independent, nonprofit organization that relies on the generosity of individuals and charitable organizations to fund its work including the Roderick and Solange MacArthur Justice Center, the Fund for Nonviolence, M. Quinn Delaney, and the Tides Foundation. As demand for our resources grows, please consider making a tax-deductible donation (deathpenaltyinfo.org/donate) today that will provide us with the essential funding we need to continue serving as the most reliable source of information on the death penalty.
