PREFACE

This is Issue #77, the final issue of these periodic reports, having first been launched on June 15, 1984. On that date, the death penalty for juvenile offenders (defined as those under age 18 at the time of their crimes) was an obscure issue in law as well as in political and social arenas. During the last twenty-one years, these reports have been with us (1) through the intense litigation of the late 1980s, (2) through our society's near hysteria about violent juvenile crime in the 1990s, (3) into the era of the international pressure on the United States to abandon this practice, and (4) now at the end of this practice. The validity and influence of these reports is indicated by the citations to them in the opinions of leading courts, including the United States Supreme Court: Roper v. Simmons, 125 S.Ct. 1183, 1192, 1193, 1210, 1211, 1221 (2005); In re Stanford, 537 U.S. 968, 971 (2002); and Stanford v. Kentucky, 492 U.S. 361, 373 (1989). In the litigation leading up to the final juvenile death penalty case before the United States Supreme Court (Roper v. Simmons, 125 S.Ct. 1183 (2005)), the Missouri Supreme Court majority opinion included 12 citations to these reports: See Simmons v. Roper, 112 S.W.3d 397, 408, 409, 411 (Mo. 2003). This final issue of this periodic report is intended to document the status of the death penalty for juvenile offenders as of the day before the United States Supreme Court held this practice to be unconstitutional.

These reports sketch the characteristics of the juvenile offenders and their crimes who have been sentenced to death, who have been executed, and who are currently under death sentences. A source of confusion and occasional inaccuracy is the difference between being legally under a sentence of death and being physically housed on a state's death row. This report chronicles the exact date of imposition and reversal or removal of the death sentence by a court or executive officer. Therefore, the list of persons currently under juvenile death sentences excludes those for whom the sentence has been legally reversed or removed, even if the case is still being reviewed or reconsidered. However, it is not uncommon for such a person to continue to be housed on the prison's death row even though no longer legally under a death sentence. This list also includes those persons under legal death sentences who are housed temporarily in local jails or prisons rather than the jurisdiction's death row prison. Such temporary housing typically occurs (1) when the individual has just been sentenced to death but not yet transported to the death row prison or (2) when he or she is serving as a witness or defendant in another trial or proceeding and must be located nearby. In either case, they are under sentences of death but are not actually on death row and often are not even known to or listed by the prison officials.

The solitary goal of these reports is to collect in one place the best available data and information on the death penalty for juvenile offenders. It is left to other documents and to other organizations to argue about the pros and cons of this practice, with the hope that these data will inform those arguments and deliberations. Therefore, while a sketch of both pro and con rationales is provided, this report takes no position on the legality, wisdom, or morality of the death penalty for juvenile offenders. The author of these reports has been involved with this issue for over thirty years as a researcher and as an attorney. References to some of those involvements can be found in Appendix C to this report.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

- Beginning with the first in 1642, at least 366 juvenile offenders were executed. Twenty-two of these occurred during the current era (1973-2005), constituting 2.3% of the total of the 949 executions during this period.
- Almost two-thirds of the current-era executions of juvenile offenders occurred in Texas, with no other United States' jurisdiction or other country in the world actively involved in this practice.
- The final execution of a juvenile offender was in Oklahoma on April 3, 2003, but Oklahoma has no more juvenile offenders on death row and has not even sentenced a juvenile offender to death sentence for 9 years.
- A total of 226 juvenile death sentences were imposed from 1973 to 2005. Of these, only 71 remain currently in force and were still being litigated as of February 28, 2005. Of the other 155 sentences finally resolved, 22 (14%) resulted in execution and 133 (86%) had been reversed or commuted.
- Thompson v. Oklahoma (1988) held that the Constitution prohibits execution for crimes committed at age 15, and Wayne Thompson is serving a life sentence in prison.
- Stanford v. Kentucky (1989) held that execution for crimes at ages 16 or older is constitutional, but Stanford was granted clemency in 2003 and is serving a life sentence.
- Roper v. Simmons (2005) was decided on March 1, 2005, the day after the date of this final report, and held that execution for crimes committed at an age less than age 18 is prohibited by the United States Constitution.
- Of the 38 death penalty jurisdictions in the United States (37 states and federal), 19 jurisdictions have expressly chosen a minimum age of 18, 5 jurisdictions have chosen an age 17 minimum, and the other 14 death penalty jurisdictions use age 16 as the minimum age.
- Essentially every other nation in the world has joined international agreements prohibiting the execution of juvenile offenders, with only the United States refusing to abandon its laws permitting the juvenile death penalty.
- The annual death sentencing rate for juvenile offenses has been declining rapidly and now is at the lowest point in 15 years.
- Only 21% of the public favors the death penalty over life in prison for juveniles who commit murder (ABC News Poll; 12-19-2003).

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND:

- Actual execution of juvenile offenders sentenced to death began in 1642 (Thomas Graunger, Plymouth Colony, Massachusetts).
- Since 1642, at least 366 juvenile offenders were executed, an average of almost exactly one per year. These 366 juvenile offender executions were imposed by 38 states and the federal government, and they constituted less than 2% of the total of about 20,000 confirmed American executions since 1608.
- Twenty-two of these 366 executions for juvenile crimes were carried out during the current era (1973-2005). They constituted 2.3% of the 949 total executions during this period, an execution rate only slightly higher than had been experienced prior to 1973. These 22 executions are listed in Table 1 below.

- All but one of these executed juvenile offenders were age 17 at the time of their crimes, with only Sean Sellers (Oklahoma) being age 16.
- Only 45% of executed juvenile offenders were white, while 57% of executed adult offenders have been white. (NAACP-LDF, DEATH ROW U.S.A. at 10 (Fall 2004)).
- The races of the victims are essentially the same for executed juvenile offenders (81% white) as for executed adult offenders (80% white). However, the over-representation of female victims is even more apparent in juvenile offender executions (59% female victims) as compared to adult offender executions (49% female victims). (NAACP-LDF, DEATH ROW U.S.A. at 10 (Fall 2004)).
- The periods on death row awaiting execution for these executed juvenile offenders ranged from 6 years to over 20 years, resulting in the ages at execution ranging from 23 to 38.
- Of the 22 juvenile executions, Texas accounted for 13 (59%), Virginia for 3 (14%), and Oklahoma for 2 (9%). These three states together account for 81% of all juvenile executions in the current era. No other state has executed a juvenile offender in over 11 years.
- Almost all executions are of adult offenders, so the overall execution rate would be largely unaffected even if juvenile executions were to cease. For example, Texas has executed 338 persons in the current era, only 13 (4%) of whom were juvenile offenders. Outside of Texas, the rest of the entire United States has executed 611 persons in the current era, only 9 (1%) of whom were juvenile offenders.

LEGAL CONTEXT:

- In Thompson v. Oklahoma, 487 U.S. 815 (1988), the United States Supreme Court held that executions of offenders age 15 and younger at the time of their crimes are prohibited by the Eighth Amendment to the United States Constitution.
- In Stanford v. Kentucky, 492 U.S. 361 (1989), the United States Supreme Court held that the Eighth Amendment to the United States Constitution does not prohibit the death penalty for crimes committed at ages 16 or 17.
- Two state supreme courts have interpreted their own state constitutions to require specific minimum ages regardless of their state death penalty statute or the federal constitutional minimum age. Using this state constitutional approach, the Washington Supreme Court set the minimum age at 18 (State v. Furman, 858 P.2d 1092 (Wash. 1993), and the Florida Supreme Court set the minimum age at 17 (Brennan v. State, 754 So.2d 1 (Fla., 1999)).
- In Atkins v. Virginia, 536 U.S. 304 (2002), the United States Supreme Court held that the United States Constitution prohibits the death penalty for mentally retarded offenders, based upon reasoning closely analogous to juvenile offenders.

- In In re Stanford, 537 U.S. 968 (2002), the United States Supreme Court decided not to take the case, over a strong dissent by Justice Stevens (joined by Justices Breyer, Ginsburg, and Souter). These four Justices not only wanted to revisit the juvenile death penalty issue but were ready to declare it unconstitutional and to “put an end to this shameful practice.” On Dec. 8, 2003, the Kentucky Governor granted clemency to Kevin Stanford, changing his death sentence to life in prison without parole.
- In Simmons v. Roper, 112 S.W.3d 397 (Mo. 2003), the Supreme Court of Missouri interpreted current national data to hold that the death penalty for juvenile offenders now violates the United States Constitution’s prohibition against Cruel and Unusual Punishment, but they did not reach the issue under the Missouri State Constitution. Although a ruling on federal constitutionality, Simmons applied only in Missouri at that juncture.
- On January 26, 2004, the United States Supreme Court granted certiorari (124 S.Ct. 1171) and agreed to hear the Simmons case, restyled as Roper v. Simmons. Oral arguments in Roper v. Simmons were heard on October 13, 2004., and the two issues before the Supreme Court were as follows:
 - (1) Once the United States Supreme Court sets the Eighth Amendment Cruel and Unusual standard, can a lower court subsequently reinterpret and reject that standard under evolving standards of decency?
 - (2) Is the death penalty for a 17-year-old offender now Cruel and Unusual under the Eighth Amendment’s evolving standard of decency?
- On March 1, 2005 (the day after the effective date of this report), the United States Supreme Court decided Roper v. Simmons, 125 S.Ct. 1183 (2005). In that decision, the Supreme Court ruled that the death penalty for a 17-year-old offender is now Cruel and Unusual under the Eighth Amendment’s evolving standard of decency.
- As of February 28, 2005, 37 states and the federal government had statutes authorizing the death penalty for capital crimes, almost all of which are forms of murder. Of those 38 death penalty jurisdictions, 19 jurisdictions (50%) have expressly chosen age 18 at the time of the crime as the minimum age for eligibility for that ultimate punishment. Another 5 jurisdictions (13%) have chosen age 17 as the minimum. The other 14 death penalty jurisdictions (37%) use age 16 as the minimum age, either through an express age in the statute (3 states) or by court ruling (11 states). See Table 2 below.
- Minimal political consideration of lowering the express statutory minimum age from 18 to 16 has occurred in the past few years. No state has done so during the current death penalty era, and no record has been found of this occurring at any other time in American history.

JUVENILE DEATH PENALTY IN OTHER COUNTRIES:

- The death penalty for juvenile offenders has become a uniquely American practice, in that it has been abandoned legally by nations everywhere else due to the express provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child and of several other international treaties and agreements.
- Article 37 (a) of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "Neither capital punishment nor life imprisonment without possibility of release shall be imposed for offences committed by persons below eighteen years of age." The United States is the only country in the world that has not yet ratified this international agreement, in large part because of our desire to remain free to retain the death penalty for juvenile offenders.
- A very few rogue executions of juvenile offenders in 2 or 3 countries outside of the United States have occurred in last decade, despite the legal ban on this practice. These rogue executions were illegal in the countries in which they occurred and are not seen in any way as a rejection either of the international agreements or of the customary international law (jus cogens) forbidding such executions.
- In the most recent development, Iran is said to have hanged Iman Farrokhi, a 17-year-old offender, on January 20, 2005, for killing a member of Iran's security forces.

JUVENILE DEATH SENTENCES IMPOSED, JANUARY 1, 1973, THROUGH FEBRUARY 28, 2004

- Table 3 below lists the sentences imposed each year according to the Bureau of Justice Statistics and to my research.
- A total of 226 juvenile death sentences have been imposed since 1973, only 3% of the total of the approximately 7,543 death sentences imposed for offenders of all ages. Just over 71% of these juvenile death sentences have been imposed on 17-year-old offenders, with the other 29% imposed on offenders ages 15 and 16 at the time of their crimes.
- Of these 226 juvenile death sentences imposed in the current era, only 71 remain currently in force (see Table 5 below). For the 155 juvenile death sentences finally resolved either by reversal or execution, the reversal rate is 86% (133/155). Only 14% (22/155) of finally resolved juvenile death penalty cases have resulted in actual execution.

- In the last few years, the juvenile death sentencing rate appears to have declined significantly. The 7 such sentences annually in 2000 and 2001 were only half of the typical rate in the preceding 6 years. In 2002, only 4 juvenile death sentences were imposed, but the adult death sentencing rate also fell dramatically. Only 2 juvenile death sentences were imposed annually in 2003 and 2004, the lowest annual rate since 1989.
- These 226 juvenile death sentences have been imposed in 23 individual states, comprising well over half of the death penalty jurisdictions during this time period. Table 4 below lists all death penalty jurisdictions which have imposed juvenile death sentences since 1973.

- Texas (58 sentences) is the clear leader in this practice, followed at quite a distance by Florida (32 sentences) and then Alabama (23 sentences). These 3 states together account for exactly half (113/226) of all juvenile death sentences.
- Juvenile death sentences for black and white juvenile offenders appear to be spread around the sentencing jurisdictions fairly evenly, but the 27 of the 28 Latin offenders are in Texas, Arizona, Florida and Nevada.
- Almost all (98%) juvenile offenders sentenced to death were males. The 5 cases involving female juveniles were in the deep south (Mississippi, Alabama, and Georgia) and in Indiana. The 13 cases involving very young offenders (age 15 at crime) were scattered across 10 different states.
- Appendix A to this report provides a detailed listing of name, age, race, gender, state, and current status for each juvenile death sentence.

DEATH ROW INMATES UNDER JUVENILE DEATH SENTENCES AS OF FEBRUARY 28, 2005

- As of February 28, 2005, the day before the Supreme Court decided Roper v. Simmons, a total of 71 persons were on death row under death sentences received for juvenile crimes (see Table 5 below). These 71 condemned juvenile offenders constituted only 2% of the total death row population of 3,471.¹
- Although all were ages 16 or 17 at the time of their crimes, their current ages range from 18 to 43.
- Race of offender for these juvenile cases differs from the adult offenders currently under sentences of death. Although 46% of the adult offenders are white, only 34% of the juvenile offenders are white. Another major difference is that only 10% of adults are Latin, while 21% of the juveniles are Latin. (NAACP-LDF, DEATH ROW U.S.A. at 1 (Fall 2004)).
- These 71 juvenile offenders currently are under death sentences in only 12 of the 19 states which authorize the death penalty for juvenile offenders, and they have been on death row from 6 months to 24 years. Texas has by far the largest death row for juvenile offenders, holding 29 (41%) of the national total of 71 juvenile offenders.
- All juvenile offenders currently under death sentences are male and have been convicted and sentenced to death for murder.

¹ The total number of death row inmates comes from the premier source of this information: NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND, INC, DEATH ROW U.S.A., FALL 2004 (New York: 2004) (data current as of Oct. 1, 2004).

- Well over three-quarters of these cases involve 17-year-old offenders, and two-thirds of them are offenders of color. In contrast, 81% of the victims are adults. Over two-thirds of the victims are white, and half are females.
- Appendix B to this report sets forth the names of the juvenile offenders on death row as of February 28, 2005, along with some brief information about their crimes and sentences. Multiple sentencing dates mean that an earlier death sentence was reversed and subsequently a new death sentence was imposed.

RATIONALE FOR JUVENILE DEATH PENALTY:

Arguments in Favor:

- Because the American juvenile death penalty is authorized in 19 separate state jurisdictions, each essentially authorized to go its own way, the justifications for this practice among these states can be expected to differ. However, common themes can be detected:
 - (1) Violent juvenile crime, particularly homicide, is perceived to be much worse in the United States than in most other countries;
 - (2) Juvenile homicide rates increased substantially until the mid- to late-1990s. Although they have fallen dramatically since that time, public fear of juvenile homicide remains very high.
 - (3) Juvenile murderers seem to be particularly brutal and nonresponsive to civilized entreaties to stop the killing;
 - (4) Almost every political leader is pushing strongly for harsher punishments for violent juvenile crime; and
 - (5) Correcting the societal conditions which breed violent juvenile crime seems to be a huge task nearly impossible to achieve in any significant measure.

Arguments Opposed:

- Arguments against the juvenile death penalty typically focus on a similarly wide spectrum of concerns:
 - (1) Almost all of these teenage offenders have had terrible childhoods. Given their youth, such teenagers have not yet had the opportunity to age out of some of the effects of their terrible childhoods.
 - (2) Medical research during the past decade indicates that the adolescent brain does not mature organically until the late teens or early twenties, with impulse control being the last to fully develop.
 - (3) The threat of capital punishment does not deter teenagers who tend to have little realistic understanding of death and instead tend to see themselves as immortal.
 - (4) The retributive desire to visit extremely harsh punishment upon egregious offenders is blunted at least somewhat if that offender is a child.

- (5) Harsh punishments for violent juvenile crimes are only temporary band-aid solutions, with the only effective long-term solutions coming from cleaning up the neighborhoods, schools, and societal structures that continue to generate such violent teenagers.
- The basic tenets of these two positions have not changed during the current era of the American death penalty. They tend to be included not only in sweeping discussions of the juvenile death penalty as constitutional and legislative policy but also in the arguments of opposing attorneys in individual juvenile death penalty cases.

CONCLUSIONS:

- All other nations have abandoned in law the death penalty for juvenile offenders, with only the United States (essentially Texas) continuing this practice.
- Considerable pressure from international human rights groups is being imposed upon the United States jurisdictions that continue to execute juvenile offenders.
- The most promising legal arguments in courts today are:
 - (1) that the death penalty for juvenile offenders and mentally retarded offenders should be treated the same under the Eighth Amendment;
 - (2) that the death penalty for juvenile offenders is prohibited under the Eighth Amendment “evolving standards of decency;” and
 - (3) that the death penalty for juvenile offenders violates international law.
- The annual death sentencing rate for juvenile offenders has dropped precipitously. Following the year 1999's peak of 14 sentences, only 7 juvenile death sentences were imposed each year in 2000 and 2001. Only 4 were verified for 2002, only 2 for 2003, and only 2 for 2004.
- Given the declining sentencing rate, the increased legislative activity, and the continuing international pressure, these appear to be the last days of the juvenile death penalty. It has already all but disappeared around the world except in the United States. In fact, on March 1, 2005, the day after the final date of this report, the United States Supreme Court decided Roper v. Simmons, prohibiting the juvenile death penalty as Cruel and Unusual Punishment under the Eighth Amendment to the United States Constitution.
