

Victim Impact Evidence, State by State

(by Dean Sanderford of the Colorado Capital Habeas Unit, 2012)

The Eighth Amendment permits victim impact evidence to describe the characteristics of the victim and the effect of the victim's death on family members, but it prohibits the inclusion of sentence recommendations or characterizations of the crime or defendant. See Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808, 827, 830 n.2 (1991); Hain v. Gibson, 287 F.3d 1224, 1238-39 (10 Cir. 2002). Below is a summary of the state law, as it relates to this constitutional mandate, in each death-penalty state.

1. Twenty-nine states limit victim impact evidence to characteristics of the victim and the effects of the crime, either by statute or by case law.

Alabama Ex parte McWilliams , 640 So.2d 1015, 1017 (Ala. 1993)

Wyoming Harlow v. State , 70 P.3d 179, 193-94 (Wyo. 2003)

2. Four states have neither statute nor case law specifically addressing the scope of victim impact evidence in capital cases. Two of those states, however, have a generally applicable victim impact statute – that is, statutes not specific to capital cases – that define victim impact evidence to include content that is constitutionally proscribed in capital cases.

Kansas
Kentucky Ky. Rev. Stat. § 421.520(2)
Mississippi Miss. Code Ann. § 99-10-155(b)
Montana

3. One state expressly allows constitutionally proscribed content in capital cases.

Oklahoma Lockett v. State, 53 P.3d 418, 427 (Okla. Crim. App. 2002)
